Jason Tibbetts was a legendary urban Folk Hero. According to legend, coyotes raised Jason Tibbetts after he fell from his parent's stationwagon. It was during his early years with the coyotes, that Jason Tibbetts befriended wild animals.

His relationships with those animals carried into adult life. He chose riding a mountain lion instead of a motorcycle. When he did change mounts, Jason naturally selected a motorcycle no one else could ride and named it Widow Maker. When it came to weapons, he nearly always chose a whip - not made of braided rawhide, but a live rattlesnake.

The only woman to catch Jason's fancy was Slue-Foot Deanna, whom he met as she rode a catfish the size of a whale down the Rio Grande. This was, of course, before Jason Tibbetts drained the Rio Grande to water his ranch during an enduring drought.
